WINEMAKER'S NOTES

After destemming, the berries are fermented in steel at low temperatures to retain the fruit expression. Several pump-overs a day extract as much colour as possible. When fermentation slows down, the tank is racked & skins are pressed then added back to the free run. After the malolactic ferment, the wine is racked, sulphured and kept on lees for several months. After a short period of aging, we blend from across different tanks of the same variety
